수업목표	The aim of this course is to enable students to “think theoretically and critically” when making sense of the interface between culture and politics in global politics today. This course begins by looking at how culture is understood in mainstream social science. In so doing, we will analytically and critically examine the ways in which culture informs development and social changes. Through a ‘clash of civilizations’ thesis, we will address the questions of why culture matters in IR and how differently it is understood to see the world. Afterwards, the course provides a critical understanding of culture in IR by discussing non-mainstream IR approaches. Based on this, this course examines identity politics and memory politics in East Asian IR. The course ends with a discussion of popular culture and politics. Through this course, students will be familiarized with a critical and reflexive ethos.
